Interesting Letter from Professor . Harris. [Correspondence of the Richmond Dispatch.] SEA OF MARMORA.

Travel in the Turkish Empire has its pecial difficulties. Of the two necessaries, time and money, it is extremely difficult to keep any just account. An example will illustrate. The exact date of this writing is by my watch and diary 8:30 P. M. of April 24, 1878, but the clocks of Constantinople point to 1:25, and the counting-house calendars show either Apr. 13, 1878, or Akhir 22. 1294. Two hours ago it was yesterday, for the Moslem day begins with the Muezzin's sun-set call to prayer. The months also differ from ours, and the year is counted sometimes from the Christian era; sometimes from the Higira. I reached the landing before 10:15 this morning, and found myself half a minute too late for the Bosphorus boat, advertised to start at 3:15. The confusion in money is still worse. Coins from all the rest of the world are in circulation here. The ordinary unit for transactions with boatmen, donkey-boys, guides, and shop-keepers, is the piastre, and this may be either coin or paper. The coin is either silver or bronze, and each of these last has two or more kinds differing in the amount of adulteration. So that of the six or eight sorts of piastres no two are exactly equal, and no one seems to bear any fixed ratio to the money of other nations. One man in giving you change will count five piastres to a franc; another on whom you attempt to pass them off will insist that has crossed the Marmora, passed the Dardait takes eight or ten of them to be worth a nelles, run out from the greenish waters of at all. It is a positive fact that even the beg- Ægean, and is now heading for gars in one city will sometimes decline to re-. eive money that is current in another. The para also is in common use. It is the fortieth part of a piastre, or say from one not wonder that she was so filled with the the non-commissioned staff of the First twenticate one tenth of a cent. We used to talk about Confederate shinplasters, but here we find an inconvertible paper currency in denominations as low as ten paras, or about one quarter of a cent. . TURK VS. RUSS. That Turkey has been wofully misgoverned no one can doubt. Her dominion embraces two of the finest grain-growing plains in the world, and includes varieties of soil and climate adapted to the production of everything that grows on the earth; yet there is everywhere poverty, neglect, and dilapidation-manifest tokens of the cruel oppression and greedy corruption of her horde of officers. Her capital has with- new steam-engine which he had invented, out doubt the very best situation for a splen- and which, if the judgment of many expeor four streets worthy of the name. But wheel, giving this treble the force of ordiin spite of all that can be said against nary engines, with no distinguishing of "unspeakable Turk" (the world is full of slanders), I turn away from his of the wheel. This inventor dispenses with territory with a higher estimate of his all the machinery except the one-wheel, character as a man than when I entered it which answers at once the purpose of cylinsix weeks ago. During the Turco-Russian war, unlike the Dispatch, I sympathized with the weaker party. The event has not changed my feelings. "Victrix causa diis manufactured at one fourth or less the cost piacuit, sed victa Catoni." Since we have of those now in use, and their simplicity, seen the Turk sitting calmly in his home, and the imperious Russ clanking his sabre along the streets of Stamboul, the recollections of other days have stirred my heart to a sympathy vet more profound. Unfit to rule either in Asia or in Europe, the Turk is yet, in my humble judgment, a better man than his conqueror. He is slothful, they say; and so he is; but, though he neglects his own business, he does not med- day. dle with that of other people. His sloth is not the child of vice, but the legitimate offspring of his religion. Over and over again we have been forcibly reminded of the pilot on the Ganges, who, when his boat had run aground, took out his pipe and pouch, sat down, and calmly said: "Brothers, the lines of fate cannot be obliterated. Let us have a smoke." They say the Turk oppresses Christians, and so he does, but the Christian communities are by all confession the most prosperous in the Empire. He is terribly fanatical and will not brook the slightest interference with his religion; the time was when he propagated it with the sword, but now he tolerates all other forms of worship. The Russian is still intolerant and a meddler in other men's matters. He has waged a fierce war in the name of Christianity, but really for the sake of conquest. He is now proudly parading the streets of Constantinople, not with bodies of armed men, but in the persons of hundreds of fine-looking officers, lavishing his roubles in the bazaars and coquetting especially with the bishops of the Armenian Church. For the sake of civilization and of Christian truth let us devoutly hope that the sceptre of these fair regions may not descend from the hands of a stolid fanatic to those of an artful hypo-

We saw the Queen City of the East under very unfavorable circumstances. The ordinary population is but little over a million. Now nearly two millions of people, including visitors, soldiers, and refugees, are crowded into the city and its suburbs. Then, too, it was raining when we arrived, and continued to rain almost incessantly while we remained. But even when seen at this disadvantage, Constantinople is entirely peerless for situation. It sits on bills nearly as high but not so steep as those of Richmond, at the confluence of three sheets of water-the Sea of Marmora, the Golden Horn, and the Bosphorus. From Seraglio Point one looks northeastward right up the Bosphorus, a rapid current of a mile wide by 300 feet deep, coming down from the Black sea, which is about twenty miles dis-The business will be conducted in the future by me, under the old firm-name of J. The success which has attended his former efforts in the Monumental city is a guarantee that the exhibition will be one of unusual attraction, and, considering the charitable object for which it is given, it is to be hoped the Theatre will be filled to its utmost. .

After the first night the carnival and bazaar will be continued through the week, when a choice collection of fancy and other articles, confectionery, etc., will be displayed.

Some of the loveliest young ladies in the city will appear in the tableaux and wait upon the tables and booths erected upon the stage and floor which has been laid over the orchestra and parquet. Each night one Alban's Hall Tuesday night, and address or another of the city bands will give a promenade-concert, and altogether the carnival and bazaar will be a source of unusual pleasure to all who attend.
